The Mission

My Weird Prompts is a daily AI-generated podcast that takes curiosity seriously. A real human (Daniel Rosehill, in Jerusalem) records voice-memo questions; a custom pipeline of frontier LLMs, cloned voices, and GPU TTS turns each one into a fully produced episode — automatically.

What makes the show distinctive

- Radically transparent AI: every episode discloses what's human, what's synthesized, and what it cost to make.
- A real cast, not a feed: Herman the donkey, Corn the sloth, and Jim from Ohio give the show a recurring world listeners come back for.
- Open by default: full episode archive published as a Hugging Face dataset; pipeline documented in public.
- Range no human team can match: 815 episodes spanning gut health, infrastructure, geopolitics, dev tooling, weird history, and small life questions — at $0.30–0.45 per episode.

Why Sponsor

Audience. Technical, curious, globally distributed. Skews toward AI builders, ops/infra engineers, researchers, and indie tech operators — the people writing the cheques on developer tools, cloud, and AI infrastructure.

Sponsorship inventory

- Pre-roll / mid-roll / post-roll host reads, voiced by the show's AI hosts in-character (we've tested and shipped them).
- Run-of-show campaigns (every new episode for N days).
- Topic-aligned drops — sponsor a vertical (e.g. all AI-infra episodes for a quarter).
- Custom episodes built around a product story, clearly disclosed.
- GPU / API / infrastructure credits accepted in lieu of cash for aligned partners.

Why now. Plays are compounding daily, the back catalogue is large enough that mid-roll buys keep returning impressions for months, and CPMs are still pre-rate-card.
